

Changes to eligibility for British nationality

The Government is currently in the process of overhauling the immigration rules relating to British nationality. They are reviewing changes to eligibility for naturalisation as a British national and to the process for obtaining British nationality which are to be proposed over the course of the next year. This will make obtaining British nationality more difficult in future.

If you currently employ migrant workers who have successfully applied for indefinite leave to remain (settlement) in the UK and are now eligible to apply for British nationality, they should consider submitting their applications now in order to avoid the onerous changes in the near future.

If you would like further information regarding the changes to the rules relating to British nationality, or require assistance with settlement or British nationality applications, please contact Tracy Evlogidis.
